To be sure, Egyptian military aid to Somalia is not new. During the Ogaden War between Somalia and Ethiopia (1978), Cairo sent arms and logistics to support Somalia. Egyptian rulers see their role in Somalia as that of offering help for Somalia's unity and counter the security threat posed Ethiopia-Somaliland deal over a port in the Gulf of Eden.

The past year has not been without challenges. Theft has been a marked issue, with 57 power transmission towers collapsing, resulting in a repair cost of 114 million Br, while the total cost reached 817 million Br. Ashebir noted that most of these expenses are in foreign exchange, hindering further investment and expansion in the electricity sector.
