Will Masdar City be only symbolic for Abu Dhabi?

Some skeptics are concerned that the city will be only symbolic for Abu Dhabi. In an interview in 2011, Geoffrey M. Heal, a professor at Columbia Business School in New York City and an expert in environmental economics, called Masdar City "a gimmick, a way of attracting publicity and attention."

What does Masdar City look like?

Masdar City is a six million square metre city that would be home to a projected 40,000 residents and 50,000 commuters. It would sit atop a podium beneath which unsightly practicalities such as the city's utilities, waste disposal, and transport system could be tidied away. This leaves Masdar's carefully shaded public realm free for pedestrians and cyclists.

Why is Masdar City cooler than the rest of Abu Dhabi?

Through its smart design, Masdar City is a few degrees cooler than the rest of Abu Dhabi. This is because the city's streets are oriented on a southeast-northwest axis to catch the prevailing winds for cooling. The street widths are minimized and lined with buildings which provide street shading.

Is Masdar City a green city?

Unlike Abu Dhabi, a city which unthinkingly follows antiquated models and Western building principles, Masdar City has a wealth of potential to offer the world of green urban planning- something the world sorely needs. But Masdar City is certainly not without its share of critics.

What is Masdar City known for?

Pioneering new ways of moving: Masdar City is home to integrated innovative smart mobility solutions, including the world's first personal rapid transport (PRT) system, the Navya - the Middle East and North Africa's (MENA) first autonomous shuttle, and the first electric Eco-bus in the region.
