Ota city, about 80 km west of Tokyo, is the home of a new solar movement that involves 550 homes receiving free solar panels from the government. Since Japan is struggling to produce resources and is looking for ways to avoid blackouts, installing the solar panels for free in one of the sunniest locations in Japan made perfect sense.

Unlike solar without batteries (i.e. a grid-tied solar system), a solar-plus-battery installation keeps your power on by "islanding," or disconnecting itself from the grid when an outage is detected. While the blackout remains in effect, your little solar island will charge the batteries during the day and discharge them at night.
